Talk to just one scientific career ambassador or all of them during the 3 hour come-and-go event. Click here for more information and to register.
Meet Dr. Erin Hopper - the new director of TIBBS

Our office recently welcomed Erin Hopper as the newest member of the STaD team! Erin completed her undergraduate degree here at UNC, where she participated in undergraduate research in the laboratory of Professor Mark Schoenfish. After that, she switched to a darker shade of blue for a few years while pursuing her doctorate at Duke University. Working under the supervision of Professor Michael Fitzgerald, she used hydrogen/deuterium exchange and mass spectrometry to evaluate the thermodynamic stability of proteins and to quantify the strength of protein-ligand interactions.

After earning her Ph.D. in chemistry, Erin became a postdoctoral fellow in the laboratory of Kenneth Tomer at the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences (NIEHS). As a postdoc, she used chemical labeling techniques coupled with mass spectrometry to probe protein structure and protein-ligand interaction surfaces. While at NIEHS, Erin took advantage of a variety of opportunities to gain experience in program management and science education. She served as chair of the NIEHS Trainees Assembly Steering Committee to bring educational activities to the trainees at NIEHS, and she helped to organize the 2010 NIEHS Biomedical Career Fair. She also became active in teaching and outreach activities.

Erin joined the STaD Office in November, and she is very happy to be back at UNC, where she looks forward to sharing her enthusiasm for science with graduate students. She will be directing TIBBS and will serve as the assistant director of the Academic and Career Excellence program. Erin welcomes input on improving professional development programming and can be reached at erin_hopper@unc.edu.

Pioneering Postdoc Programs

Did you know that the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) offers non-laboratory postdoctoral positions in risk assessment? These positions are ideal for PhD-level scientists who enjoy writing and who are interested in applying toxicological, epidemiological, and environmental data to develop risk assessment documents and guide science policy decisions.

Visit the program website for more information. Openings are posted periodically, so be sure to check often!
New Booklet from ScienceCareers.org

Are you undecided about your personal career trajectory or unsure of how to find a position that fits both your skill set and your personality?

Science Careers has compiled a new booklet to help you assess your strengths and weaknesses and navigate your own career path.

Browse through “Career Trends: Finding Your Personal Job Chemistry” for information on topics such as finding a good fit, careers away from the bench, and expanding your professional skills training. You’ll also find advice and commentary on how to begin a satisfying and rewarding career.

To access other Science Careers booklets, set up an account on sciencecareers.org. You will receive a welcome email containing links to all available booklets.

TIBBS Trivia Contest

If you’re one of the first ten PhD students to correctly identify the person pictured to the right you’ll get a free candy bar!

Here are a couple of hints:

1. As an investigator for the American Heart Association, she studied the ways in which hypertension affects the circulatory system.
2. She established a Queens College scholarship fund to provide aid for minority students majoring in chemistry and physics.

Email your guesses to erin_hopper@unc.edu. Good luck!
