Elements of Assertiveness

Have you ever found yourself in a situation where you could have done a better job communicating what you wanted? Assertiveness is a skill most of us need to learn and many of us do not easily use. This workshop will provide you with the basic elements of assertive communication as well as how to utilize these in situations that are unique to graduate students and postdocs. The workshop is presented by Dr. Rhonda Sutton, Director of Postdoctoral Affairs at NC State University.

New TIBBS Study Area Created in Bioinformatics Bldg

Hey! There's a new graduate student and postdoc lounge in the Northeast corner of the first floor of the Bioinformatics Building. The space is located right next to the BBSP and STaD offices, and it can be used for informal gatherings, a quiet place to study or do lit searches (wifi signal is strong - bring your own laptop), or simply a place to enjoy your coffee or eat lunch among friends.

There's also an adjacent conference room that can be reserved by students and postdocs. The room number is 1115 and there is a sign up calendar just outside the door.

The TIBBS lending library with over 100 books on teaching, mentoring, work-life balance, achieving scientific success, and career options for PhDs has been moved to the new TIBBS lounge, too.

TIBBS Trivia Contest

If you're one of the first ten PhD students to correctly identify the person pictured to the right you'll get a free candy bar!

Here are a couple of hints:

1.) He was born to Jewish parents on the first day of the Casablanca conference of WWII wherein the allied powers demanded the unconditional surrender of Nazi forces.
2.) He is the only person to ever have been chosen posthumously to receive a Nobel prize.

Email your guesses to pdb@unc.edu. Good luck!
